Diversity Statement,

In professional collaborative settings, I strive to contribute to an atmosphere that feels trusting and supportive. At the core of this work is a commitment to inclusivity. Working with people with information processing styles and work styles different from my own has been particularly rewarding. I have worked with a range of coauthors across my research projects, across continents, age groups and languages. Brown is a particularly diverse economics department, which lends itself to exceptionally lively seminars. To communicate effectively and deeply understand across lines of difference, I have taken classes in income inequality at Brown and I have been a TA for race and gender inequality courses at Brown University. This has enriched my intellectual life.

I have found that the more time I take to deeply get to know my colleagues as people, the more willing we are to take academic risks and share our perspectives. I believe compassion for and curiosity about others is fundamental to transformative learning and research spaces. I look forward to developing ways I can continue to center teamwork and collaboration in my research and professional intellectual life. As a Hispanic born and raised in a different country, I can bring diversity and new ideas.

Sincerely,

Juan Pablo Uribe
